An Eloquent New Look

December 8, 2005

North Vancouver, BC – Eloquent Systems is unveiling a new website that enables you to easily navigate to a wealth of on-line information. As a leading vendor of knowledge management database applications, the company's website links users directly into databases created by Eloquent Systems' customers.

"The power of our solutions is easy to see for yourself on our new website," says Merv Richter, President & CEO of Eloquent Systems. "In addition to information on our company and our products, you can also see our extensive client list and link directly into the public databases some of our clients have built with our software."

The new website also offers on-line tutorials where you can experience the power of our applications from the convenience of your Internet browser. Users typically find the tutorials informative and intuitive to follow.

"I'm delighted with the way this new website showcases our work," says Richter. "After more than 30 years in this business, we have evolved software to give our clients the best of both worlds – a stable, packaged product for a quick start plus the ability to quickly tailor the software to suit our clients' specific needs."
